American Recovery and Reinvestment Act Microsite Takes Guesswork out of Title I Funding

Curriculum Associates helps educators find stimulus solutions

NORTH BILLERICA, Mass., April 9, 2009— As educators scramble to understand the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009 (ARRA), questions arise about its link to classroom learning. Curriculum Associates, a leading publisher of research-based supplemental curriculum materials and tools for today's diverse classrooms, has launched an ARRA microsite dedicated to answering these questions by providing helpful, up-to-date guidance on the recently-signed ARRA and its effect on education and education reform. The site can be found at www.CurriculumAssociates.com/ARRA.

Curriculum Associates' ARRA microsite provides educators with:

- Guidelines to help interpret ARRA
- A guide to the flow of funds to education
- A compilation of links that cover everything from the law itself, editorials, and what ARRA means for specific states and school districts
- A comprehensive list of products that meet Title I specifications

“This is an unprecedented moment in time for education. Never before has our government invested so much, so quickly in the educational system of our country. And because of the timing of this Act, there is an amazing amount of confusion as to its implementation. As part of our ongoing partnership with educators, we launched this microsite to assist school and district leaders in making the most of the increased funding,” said Robert L. Waldron, president of Curriculum Associates.
